

“Well then. Profile me.”

“Well looking at your rather flamboyant outfit you are an attention grabber and need to be the most important person in the room. From the fading band on your finger you are recently divorced, probably from a lack of faithfulness due to your need to be the centre of the universe and your husbands failure to notice that. Your hair is done exceptionally well showing that you come from an upper class but your cheap perfume says the money comes from someone else. You write with your left hand but sign with your right showing that you injured your right arm and as a result learned to write with your left and grew more accustomed to it. Your French and Spanish are very basic but have a slight accent indicating you learned them when you were younger but do to you frequenting them less you lack the skill to carry on an extended conversation. The bags under your eyes indicate that although you have refined tastes you are uncomfortable with your current living condition. You ask me to profile you simply for your own amusement and to test my ability of deduction though you suspect I am a sham and I have previously been acquainted with someone close to you. By observing your eyes I see that I have upset you and revealed information to your party that you would rather not have found out. Your smile is now being forced to save face and to make others believe I am being dishonest. I do in fact know of you but have very little interest in wasting my time proving myself to you. I can honestly tell you that although this is your twenty-seventh birthday you still behave like a child and encountering someone like me who is very black and white has crushed your spirits and has caused you to tear up also causing your makeup to smear around your eye. No I will not apologize for I do not see a reason to. You have asked me to profile you and I have done just that. If you are dissatisfied with my deduction I encourage you to pay someone else to say what you'd like to hear but I warn you that if you were to go to another person like me they would concur with what I have said and you will end up feeling far more depressed than you already are.

“Get out.”

“From your response I can conclude that you are indeed immature and I have said many things you deny or are displeased with. I will take my leave but I’d advise against asking strangers to profile you. At the very least ask someone who is a sham as not to embarrass yourself and prove them to be very efficient in there deductive capability.”

-Inspired by Sherlock Holmes